CPR, AED and Basic First Aid for Worksites

Emergencies Happen in Public Places Like Yours.

More than 1,000 people suffer non-traumatic cardiac arrest outside of the hospital every single day in the United States. While only about 30 percent of these cardiac arrest victims are treated with pre-hospital bystander CPR, studies show that survival rates are significantly improved with early CPR and defibrillation.

American Heart Association Heart Disease and Stroke Statistics—2014 Update.

Are Your Employees Prepared For Emergencies?

The latest emergency care guidelines emphasize the success and importance of lay rescuer programs, including those where employees are trained in CPR the workplace.

Higher survival rates associated with well-organized CPR training programs have driven a higher demand and expectation for such programs in workplaces and in public areas, including in retail businesses, hotels, restaurants, other enterprises with high customer throughput, and businesses of all industries.

Consider the benefit of providing a CPR class for your employees:

- Just one preventable cardiac arrest death can cause a legal, public relations and employee morale disaster for a business.
- A well-organized workplace CPR response can turn an unexpected and unfortunate event into a saved life—the best return on investment imaginable.
